

Lei Cheng, PhD, RN

Lecturer, School of Nursing, Fudan University

Lei Cheng (Grace), PhD, RN is a lecturer and faculty member from the School of Nursing, Fudan University. She was previously a visiting scholar at the School of Nursing, Duke University, the Nursing Science Department of Children's National Hospital, and the Joanna Briggs Institute (JBI) Evidence-Based Health Care Center. As a determined nurse scientist aiming to serve vulnerable children and their families, her research mainly focuses on alleviating the impact of cancer on children and their families across the disease trajectory, e.g., symptom management, transition readiness, supportive care, and palliative care. By leading a multipipeline team and collaborators around the world, her research is funded by six external international, national, and regional grants. She has published more than forty papers in peer-reviewed journals.